

Are you a Women's History Scholar or Practitioner? Find your people by joining and supporting the National Collaborative for Women's History Sites (NCWHS) today!

Preserving Women's History in Place

NCWHS champions the preservation and interpretation of sites that bear witness to women's participation in American life, helping make women's contributions visible and valued.

Inclusivity and Intersectionality

The organization advocates on behalf of women and gender non-conforming individuals, emphasizing equity, justice, anti-racism, and anti-heterosexism in its mission and values.

1. Be Part of an Active Network

- Membership opens doors to a vibrant national network of historians, museum professionals, educators, heritage trail curators, and concerned citizens.
- You gain opportunities to showcase your work on the NCWHS website and through our social media channels.

2. Access to Resources & Professional Growth

- Members can participate in webinars, workshops, and professional development programs focused on curating and interpreting women's history at historic sites.
- You also get to present research and engage in sessions at leading conferences like AASLH, NCPH, AAHH, OAH, and the Berkshire Conference.

3. Influence and Impact through Projects

- National Votes for Women Trail: Support development of heritage trails, state-by-state coordination, and historic marker programs that commemorate suffrage sites nationwide.
- Toolkits & Interpretive Resources: NCWHS offers the "Telling Women's Stories" online toolkit and other resource packs to help historic sites research and incorporate women's history into their public programming.
- Her March to Democracy Podcast: Chronicling the state-by-state fight for voting rights for women, listen to the stories of these remarkable activists who never wavered in their belief in democracy.
- Organize sessions for conferences in public history and related fields to increase awareness and provide opportunities to share our insights
- NCWHS has published Revealing Women's History and Women's History, Women's Sites

4. Join Forces with Allies

- The organization collaborates with major history-related agencies, including the National Park Service, National Women's History Project, American Association for State and Local History, National Parks Conservation Association and the Organization of American Historians, strengthening collective outreach efforts.

5. Stay Informed and Respond to Challenges

- NCWHS actively responds to threats facing the humanities and history, especially place-based history found at historic sites such as potential budget cuts or executive actions that might erase or diminish women's stories from public narratives.
- Support women's history in all its forms!